In 312 AD, Tomossonie was serving as a bodyguard to Emperor Constantine I. Constantine was a pagan, but he was tolerant of Christians. However, his rival, Maxentius, was a cruel persecutor of Christians.

Tomossonie was a Christian himself, and he was deeply troubled by Maxentius's actions.

In October 312, Constantine and Maxentius met in battle at the Milvian Bridge, just outside of Rome. The battle was fiercely fought, and for a time it seemed that Maxentius would be victorious. However, Tomossonie rallied his fellow soldiers and led a charge against Maxentius's forces.

Tomossonie fought with great bravery, and he was instrumental in turning the tide of the battle in Constantine's favor.

During the battle, Tomossonie saved Constantine's life. Maxentius had ordered his cavalry to charge at Constantine, but Tomossonie intercepted them and fought them off. Tomossonie was badly wounded in the battle, but he managed to escape with his life.

Constantine's victory at the Milvian Bridge was a turning point in Roman history. It marked the end of paganism in Rome and the beginning of the Christian era. Tomossonie's bravery and loyalty played a key role in Constantine's victory, and he is still revered as a hero by the people of Rome today.

After the battle, Tomossonie was rewarded for his bravery. He was promoted to the rank of tribune, and he was given a large sum of money. Tomossonie used his wealth to build a church in Rome, which was dedicated to Saint Peter. The church still stands today, and it is known as the Basilica of San Pietro in Vincoli.

Tomossonie died in Rome in 320 AD. He was buried in the Basilica of San Pietro in Vincoli, and his tomb is still there today. Tomossonie is still revered as a hero by the people of Rome, and his story is still told today.
