House was born in 1902 in Lyon, Mississippi. He grew up in a musical family, and he began playing the guitar at an early age. By the time he was a teenager, he was a skilled musician, and he began performing at local parties and dances.

In the 1920s, House moved to Memphis, Tennessee, where he met other blues musicians, including Charley Patton and Willie Brown. He also began recording his music, and his first recordings were released in 1928.

House's recordings were a huge success, and he quickly became one of the most popular blues musicians in the country.

In the 1930s, House's career began to decline. The Great Depression hit the music industry hard, and House found it difficult to find work. He also struggled with personal problems, including alcoholism and drug addiction.

In the 1940s, House left Memphis and moved to Rochester, New York. He continued to play music, but he never regained the popularity he had enjoyed in the 1920s. In the 1960s, House was rediscovered by a new generation of blues fans, and he began performing again. He toured extensively and recorded several new albums.

House died in 1988 at the age of 86. He is considered one of the most important blues musicians of all time, and his music continues to inspire and influence musicians today.

Son House's Music

Son House's music was a unique blend of traditional Delta blues and personal expression. His songs were often dark and brooding, and they dealt with themes of love, loss, and redemption. House's guitar playing was equally distinctive. He used a variety of open tunings, and his slide guitar work was both powerful and expressive.

House's music has been praised by critics for its honesty and emotional power. Robert Christgau wrote that House's "voice is a raw, bluesy wail that cuts through the listener's heart." Greil Marcus called House "one of the greatest bluesmen who ever lived." And Peter Guralnick wrote that House's music "is a testament to the human spirit's ability to transcend adversity."

Son House's Legacy

Son House's legacy is immense. He is considered one of the most important blues musicians of all time, and his music has influenced countless artists, including Bob Dylan, Eric Clapton, and the Rolling Stones.
