The Story

Once upon a time, there were three little pigs who left home to seek their fortunes. The first pig was lazy and built his house of straw. The second pig was a little more industrious and built his house of sticks. The third pig was the most hardworking of the three and built his house of bricks.

One day, the Big Bad Wolf came along and huffed and puffed and blew down the first pig's house of straw. The first pig ran to his brother's house of sticks, but the wolf blew that down too. The two pigs then ran to their brother's house of bricks, and the wolf tried to blow that down, but he couldn't.

The wolf was so angry that he climbed up on the roof and tried to come down the chimney. But the third pig had a pot of boiling water on the fire, and he poured it down the chimney, scalding the wolf and sending him running away.

The Moral of the Story

The Three Little Pigs and the Big Bad Wolf is a story with many morals. One of the most important is the importance of hard work. The third pig was the only one who built his house of bricks, and he was the only one who was able to keep the wolf out.

Another moral of the story is the importance of preparation. The first two pigs built their houses quickly and without much thought, and they paid the price when the wolf came along. The third pig took his time and built his house carefully, and he was able to withstand the wolf's attacks.

Finally, the story teaches us to be wary of strangers. The wolf was a stranger to the three little pigs, and he tried to trick them into letting him into their houses. The pigs were wise to be suspicious of him, and they were able to keep him out.
